

Human Subject Research Training (50 possible points)

The Institutional Review Board (IRB) is the unit at the University of Florida that reviews all research that deal with human subjects. In short form, if you plan to ask a human a question, you are conducting human subject research. The IRB is responsible for providing the needed training and certifying that you have passed an examination of your knowledge of IRB requirements. You cannot conduct any human subject research without this certification. Go to the IRB Website and follow the instructions for completing the training and registering with IRB. Post a screenshot of the certificate that appears at the end of the training to Assignment 1 in Canvas.
